Expert view

George Kluafit, director of Polyform UK (020 7368 7600, polyformuk.com), offers his advice on designing a fitted wardrobe

✳ For the best results, it's important you always put the functionality of your wardrobes before the appearance of them. Spend more money on the interior elements of the design than on the finish of the doors. This is because you'll get used to the look, but if the wardrobe does not work functionally, it will annoy you.

✳ You should never compromise on the storage areas in your rooms. If you are replacing a wardrobe in any of your bedrooms, you must have at least the same amount of space as you had before. The hanging area is always the first priority, everything else, like drawers, shelves, etc, come after.

✳ The quality and size of your wardrobes should always be a major consideration to ensure a long lifespan. For example, choosing a better quality carcass width is better than picking a less robust option as it will make sure your wardrobe stands the test of time, maybe lasting for the next 10 or 20 years.

✳ If you have space in your room, it's wise to choose sliding doors for your wardrobes – and the bigger the better. They look great and, most importantly, make the interior area more accessible. You can access 100% of wardrobe space using just two 5ft sliding doors, instead of opening five individual swing doors.
